Dear Members,

The museum is only weeks away from the completion of its renovation and expansion project. For more than a decade, the project has been at the core of the museum’s activity, and since 2005 everything revolved around the practical matters of construction and installation. At the end of December, everything will be really, truly finished.

While building new things is always exciting, what this is really about is running one of the greatest art museums on earth—a museum that now, with the renovation and expansion, is not only superlative in its quality but is perhaps the most architecturally clear and intuitive museum of its scale anywhere. Of course, this was the promise of Rafael Viñoly’s design all along, but it is a constant source of delight that it works so well in reality—better even than anyone imagined.

Don’t miss the lovely exhibition Sicily: Art and Invention between Greece and Rome. Visitors to the exhibition will come away with a rich appreciation for the role this vibrant crossroads of the Mediterranean played in the evolution of Greek and Roman culture. Disembodied: Portrait Miniatures and Their Contemporary Relatives runs November 10–February 16 in the prints and drawings galleries, featuring an intensely personal art form common hundreds of years ago and recently regaining popularity. Meanwhile, in gallery 115, The Netherlands Miniature, 1260–1550 opens December 21, offering illuminated manuscripts from the later Middle Ages.

Hank Willis Thomas, currently on view in the photography gallery and opening December 14 at the Transformer Station, examines how history and culture are framed, who is doing the framing, and how these factors affect our views of society. A number of other fine exhibitions are detailed on page 3.

As the end of this year approaches, the entire staff is grateful to everyone who has supported the museum—recently and over the past 10 or 12 years during the long march toward completion of the project. Please keep the museum in your year-end giving plans and thus help bring the unparalleled experience of the Cleveland Museum of Art to one and all, free of charge.

The holiday season often brings out-of-town guests and the occasion to see some sights, and it is a wonderful time to bring friends and family to the Cleveland Museum of Art. See the exhibitions. Catch a concert or film. Visit Gallery One. Stroll the galleries at your leisure. There is no better way to show the world (or remind yourself) why Cleveland is such a special place to live.

Sicily Through January 5, Smith Foundation Exhibition Hall. The exhibition, drawn from major collections worldwide including Sicilian national landmarks, examines the art and culture of the Sicilian Greeks during the Classical and Hellenistic periods, ca. 480-211 BC, from the Battle of Himera to the fall of Syracuse to the Romans. During these centuries Sicilian Greek achievements in art and architecture, poetry and rhetoric, philosophy and history, as well as mathematics, engineering, and science, reached levels of refinement and sophistication rivaling, and in some cases even surpassing, those anywhere in the Greek world. Support for the exhibition provided by James E. and Elizabeth J. Farrell.

Praxiteles: The Cleveland Apollo
Through January 5, Julia and Larry Pollock Focus Gallery. This exhibition and accompanying book reinterpret the famous bronze sculpture by the Greek master sculptor Praxiteles. Acquired by the museum in 2004, the Cleveland Apollo represents a case study for why art museums should continue to bring important antiquities into their permanent collections for the benefit of generations to come.
Support for the exhibition and publication provided by Malcolm E. Kenney.

Disembodied: Portrait Miniatures and Their Contemporary Relatives
November 10–February 16, prints and drawings galleries. Works from 1576 to 2013 show our eternal longing to capture the spirit of human relationships.

The Netherlandish Miniature, 1260–1550
Opens December 21 in gallery 115. Showcases the development and primacy of Netherlandish manuscript painting during the later Middle Ages with works from the permanent collection.

Hank Willis Thomas
Through March 9, photography gallery and December 14–March 8, Transformer Station. Hank Willis Thomas uses photography, video, the web, and installations to examine how history and culture are framed, who is doing the framing, and how these factors affect our views of society.

Staff Art Show
Through December 1, education lobby. Showcase of artwork created by museum staff members.

Renaissance Textiles
Through December 10, gallery 114. About 15 Italian silks, velvets, and altar frontalts of the 14th and 15th centuries from the museum’s world-class collection.

Luxuriance: Silks from Islamic Lands, 1250–1900
Through April 27, Arlene M. and Arthur S. Holden Gallery. Sumptuous silks from the museum’s exemplary collection.

Ai Weiwei: Circle of Animals/Zodiac Heads
Through January 26, atrium. Chinese zodiac sculptures engage political and cultural history. Organized by the Cleveland Museum of Art and AH Asia, Ai Weiwei has been made possible in part by the E. Rhodes and Leona B. Carpenter Foundation.

Fragments of the Invisible: The René and Odette Delenne Collection of Congo Sculpture
October 27–February 9, Smith Foundation Gallery. In 2010 the museum greatly enhanced its collection of African art with the acquisition of select works from the Delenne collection, shown here for the first time.

TRANSFORMER STATION
The Unicorn
Through November 30, Transformer Station. The first CMA exhibition at the Transformer Station gathers works by artists (Neil Beloufa, Martin Soto Climent, Haris Epaminonda and Daniel Gustav Cramer, Shana Lutker) who tap themes of memory, inspired by the book of the same title by the German author Martin Walser.
Hank Willis Thomas
A photographer who frames the world differently

One of the most thoughtful, provocative artists addressing race and cultural identity today, Hank Willis Thomas explores how history and culture are framed, who is doing the framing, and how these factors affect our views of society and ourselves. His tools are photography, video, and installations; his source materials include advertising, the media, historical images, and visual traditions ranging from quilt patterns to corporate logos. Just 37 years old, Thomas already boasts an impressive decade-long career that includes a 2008 monograph, a fellowship from the Tribeca Film Institute, and exhibitions and acquisitions at prestigious American, European, and African museums and galleries. This exhibition—the artist’s largest museum show to date and his first in northeast Ohio—was inspired by the Cleveland Museum of Art’s 2012 acquisition of six of his works, all on view.

The museum’s photography gallery features all 82 works in Thomas’s series Unbranded: Reflections in Black by Corporate America, 1968–2008, created in 2008. The artist selected two advertisements per year from Ebony, an influential monthly magazine aimed at African Americans, and subtracted all the branding information from the ads. His aim is to encourage us “to think more deeply about how advertising reinforces generalizations surrounding race, gender, and cultural identity.” Unbranded also provides a four-decade survey of how advertisers thought African Americans wanted to see themselves.

The Transformer Station offers a selection of photographs and videos from 2003 to the present. Included are works from the Branded series in which Thomas added logos to images. Do the Nike swooshes on Branded Torso—are they brands or scars?—commemorate championships won or imply the athlete’s ownership by the company that pays him to endorse its products? Two works riff on the Absolut vodka ads, in which the shape of the liquor bottle became a logo. Absolut Power fills the bottle with a well-known historical diagram for fitting the maximum number of slaves into a ship. In Absolut No Return, the ocean is glimpsed through a bottle-shaped window, presumably located in one of the forts that held slaves before their shipment across the Atlantic to the New World.

The lives of Africans after their arrival in America are seen in works from Thomas’s Frameworks series of 2013. These puzzle-like compositions divide found images into triangular segments, which are then arranged to form historic quilt patterns. The image fragments are framed in flag cases, triangular wooden enclosures sold for display of the folded flags given by the Armed Forces to the families of dead veterans. The image used in Trouble the Water, taken by African American photographer Robert H. McNeill in 1949, shows a mass baptism by the prominent African American Pentecostal leader Daddy Grace. The triangles assemble into the “bow-tie” quilt pattern, which some historians believe was used by abolitionists to warn escaping slaves to don a disguise. The work takes its title from the refrain of a Negro spiritual traditionally sung at baptism, believed by some to be a code to fugitive slaves to take to the water to throw off pursuing bloodhounds. Faith, patriotism, and the possibility of salvation merge in this scene of washing away past sins and sufferings to start a new, better life.

A life ends far too soon in Winter in America, a powerfully emotional video from 2005 by Thomas and Kambui Olujimi that uses stop-action animation and G.I. Joe figures to act out the shooting death of Thomas’s cousin during a robbery. The artists, who played with similar toys themselves, have come to believe that the toys breed “a culture of violent thoughts for young boys who are invited to author violent scenarios before they can even read.”
As a photographer, Thomas is well versed in how changing one’s perspective or viewpoint can alter meaning. In White Imitates Black he employs lenticular printing, in which images change as the object is viewed from different angles, to show the mutability of racial boundaries and the reciprocal nature of cultural interchange. The words can be read three ways: white imitates black, black imitates white, and black imitates black. The Wayfarer series, produced in collaboration with Sanford Biggers, addresses in-between spaces, transitions, and dual states. In Zero Hour, Thomas references the Yoruba deity Elegba, protector of travelers and intersections, also known as the Baron of the Crossroads. The baron and his clothing are divided vertically down the middle by color: one half is black, the other white. Lumistix film, which causes the image to fall in and out of focus with the viewer’s movement, has been applied to the Plexiglas covering. The lenticular and Wayfarer works undercut socially defined polarities of black and white. By requiring action on the part of the viewer, Thomas suggests that we are all complicit in the framing of racial identity.

The artist believes that “there is just as much diversity within any demographic as there is outside of it. The lines are always blurring and flexing.” A five-screen video installation, Question Bridge: Black Males, invites viewers to witness an intimate dialogue among black men who come from a wide range of geographic, economic, generational, educational, and social backgrounds. This collaborative project was created by Chris Johnson, Thomas, Bayéété Ross Smith, and Kamal Sinclair. Through questions and answers that are pointed, poignant, humorous, painful, and revealing, the work begins “a dialogue on themes that divide, unite, and puzzle black males today in the United States.” In Cleveland, as in other communities where Question Bridge is shown, that dialogue will spread through roundtable discussions held in the community and a curriculum offered to schools.

Held in two venues, one on Cleveland’s east side and one on the west side, Hank Willis Thomas encourages people to step across the boundaries that often divide us, to listen to others’ voices, and to see the world through a different frame.
For Your Eyes Only
A new exhibition displays traditional portrait miniatures alongside contemporary works dealing with similar issues of memory and identity.

Modern lovers carry photos in their wallets or phones just as for hundreds of years people carried portrait miniatures. Our desire to feel close to a distant loved one is timeless. Portrait miniatures, which first emerged at the royal courts of France and England in the 16th century, were usually small works painted in watercolor on vellum or slivers of ivory, or executed in enamel. Exchanged by friends, lovers, and family members as tokens of affection, these intimate portraits often commemorated occasions of departure, marriage, or death. They sometimes functioned as relics incorporating human hair. They could be set in elaborate boxes or simple frames, worn on the body, or tucked away in a pocket. Whether by death, gift, loss, or sale, every portrait miniature is inevitably separated from the person into whose hands it was first placed.

In 1951, Edward B. Greene's gift to the Cleveland Museum of Art of 90 portrait miniatures transformed the museum's collection into one of the greatest in North America, known by specialists worldwide. Greene's miniatures formed the core of the institution's holdings, which have grown to nearly 180 examples from more than ten national schools spanning six centuries. The exhibition Disembodied: Portrait Miniatures and Their Contemporary Relatives presents the museum's stunning collection in its entirety for the first time in over half a century, featuring more than a dozen recent acquisitions. For 600 years, miniature painters have explored issues of death, likeness, memory, identity, privacy, and body-centered scale. Disembodied includes traditional miniatures alongside works by five prominent contemporary artists—Janine Antoni, Luis González Palma, Tony Oursler, Dario Robleto, and Hiroshi Sugimoto—who are invested in exploring these same themes today.

The contemporary works are placed in an unprece-dented, intimate dialogue with the portrait miniatures, revealing new relationships. The exhibition delves into the underlying features of miniatures, and how modern

Your Lullaby Will Find A Home in My Head 2005. Dario Robleto (American, b. 1972). Hair braids made from a stretched and curled audiotape recording of Sylvia Plath reading “November Graveyard” homemade paper (pulp made from soldiers’ letters to mothers and daughters from various wars, ink retrieved from letters, sepia), excavated and melted bullet lead, carved ribcage bone and ivory, mourning dress fabric and thread, silk, mourning frame from another’s loss, walnut, glass; 59.7 x 40.6 x 33 cm. Courtesy of the artist and Inman Gallery, Houston, Collection of Carlos Bacino, Houston, TX. © Dario Robleto viewers “magically” revify them. Durio Robleto’s Your Lullaby Will Find A Home In My Head (2005) anchors one of five thematic groups, exploring miniatures as reliquaries for memory. Nothing can enhance the preciousness of a likeness more than the death of the person depicted. Forever removing the possibility that a person’s image could be captured again from life makes any remaining portraits priceless. Robleto’s work is predicated on the belief that an object can contain traces of original sentiment, that the artist’s intention makes it a repository of memory. The braid is familiar to those acquainted with miniatures, which often incorporate plaited human hair. But the braids in Your Lullaby Will Find A Home In My Head are not shorn from someone’s head; instead they are simulacrums fashioned, according to Robleto’s poetic description, “from a stretched and curled audio tape recording of Sylvia Plath reciting ‘November Graveyard.’” The viewer’s conviction that Robleto has used the actual audio recording to fashion the braids is analogous to the trust placed centuries ago in the person hired to transform a lock of hair into a piece of jewelry or use it to adorn a case. Robleto used Victorian mourning symbols in implicit acknowledgment that people during the 19th century discussed death with an ease that is foreign to us today, so the age’s materials of mourning carry their own sophisticated vocabulary of loss.
A second group of miniatures forms around Luis González Palma’s Your Gaze Distorts Me without Your Knowing It, No. 8 from 2008. Portraits in boxes, lockets, and folding cases continually engage in a process of hiding and revealing. By replacing the watercolor-on-ivory portrait that such a case might hold with a gold-tone daguerreotype, González Palma heightened the documentary aspect of the work, as it evokes 19th-century ethnographic photography rather than an intimate portrait. The incongruity between case and image is reinforced by the costume, which suggests the wealth and leisure of another time and culture.

The artist chose the setting for its historical resonance. Neither extraordinary nor costly, the case is a widely produced and basic setting into which miniatures, and later daguerreotypes, were inserted. It reinforces the fact that despite changes in material or support, the desire to protect and transport portraits transcended the end of miniature painting and the ascendance of photography during the mid 19th century.

Disembodied reawakens the spirit of the Cleveland Museum of Art’s miniatures. Because of their scale, personalized settings, and “for your eyes only” manner, portrait miniatures invite each new viewer to take the place of the first.
ON THE ROAD

See works from Cleveland’s collection in exhibitions around the world
The CMA’s great George Bellows painting Stag at Sharkey’s is getting closer to home; it’s just down I-71 in Columbus through January 4 for the exhibition George Bellows and the American Experience.

Georges Braque at the Galeries Nationales du Grand Palais, Paris, through January 6 and then at the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, February 18 to May 11, features Braque’s Guitar and Bottle of Marc on a Table.

The Springtime of the Renaissance: Sculpture and the Arts in Florence, 1400-1460 at the Musée du Louvre, Paris, through January 6, includes Mino da Fiesole’s monumental relief sculpture Julius Caesar.

Journey through the blue: La Vie at the Museu Picasso, Barcelona, through January 19, is built around the museum’s Pablo Picasso masterwork La Vie. Masterpieces of Chinese Painting 700–1900 at the Victoria and Albert Museum, London, through January 19, features two CMA works: the Yuan dynasty Bodhidharma Crossing the Yangzi on a Reed and Shen Zhou’s Twelve Views of Tiger Hill, Suzhou: The Thousand Buddha Hall and the Pagoda of the “Cloudy Cliff” Monastery.

Inventing the Modern World: Decorative Arts at the World’s Fairs, 1851–1933, Mint Museum of Art, Charlotte, NC, through January 19. Includes CMA works by Alexis Falize, the Sévres factory, the firm of Ferdinand Barbedienne, Thorvald Bindesbøll, and Jules-Constant Peyre.

Ten works from the museum collection are traveling as part of Yoga: The Art of Transformation, which is scheduled for two other venues before coming to Cleveland next summer: through January 26 at the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery in Washington, D.C.; February 21-May 25 at the Asian Art Museum of San Francisco; then June 22–September 7 here at the CMA.

Van Gogh Repetitions, at the Phillips Collection, Washington, DC, through January 26, includes two CMA masterworks, The Large Plane Trees (Road Menders at Saint-Rémy) and The Poplars at Saint-Rémy; the show comes to Cleveland March 2–May 26.

PERSONAL FAVORITE

Good Timing
Colleen Griffiths was a 2013 summer intern in the department of design and architecture and is now a senior at Miami University. The museum opens a van Gogh exhibition in spring 2014.

Colleen Griffiths, graphic design student Vincent van Gogh’s The Road Menders at St. Rémy has always caught my eye. I really like the colors—all of his color choices are very interesting. I studied van Gogh and learned how he was inspired by some of the Japanese printmakers. Looking at his work in comparison to Japanese prints and paintings, you can see how he kind of mimics some of their colors, and also the brushstrokes, like calligraphy, in the rhythm and movement.

A lot of design is understanding about color and balance between different elements, and we also talk a lot about rhythm in our critiques. His work is inspiring to me partially because there is a lot of rhythm. And his use of color I think is really gorgeous, how he will put a blue next to an intensely bright yellow. Even though trees aren’t blue, he manages to capture a mood, kind of a darker mood, I guess. The way he uses color is really applicable to design because color is a really strong tool for communication—you can either use a lot of color or a little color, depending on what you’re trying to communicate.

That communication is something that really fascinates me about his work, because he tried to paint what he felt—more than just what he saw. I’m fascinated by how colors interact together, and so I can get how he was taken by some of the colors that he saw, especially when he went to Arles. Then there’s that sense of spontaneity: I know it took a lot of time, but he makes it look effortless and in the moment, like he just dashed down what he was feeling right there. Even though it feels very spontaneous, it also feels like a finished composition.

This painting also reminds me a lot of Cleveland, with all the trees—almost of Martin Luther King Jr. Drive. Whenever we have people here from out of town they always comment how the trees here are spectacular and not like what they’ve seen elsewhere.

We’re really lucky to have the museum here in Cleveland. For as long as I can remember we’ve always come to the museum. We’re incredibly lucky to have such a broad and complete collection. It’s really unparalleled. When I recently brought some of my friends, they were just amazed—they had studied abroad and seen lots of museums, and even compared to those other famous museums, they were just amazed at the pieces that were here. Until I saw more of the world I didn’t always know how great the collection was here, but something I’ve always appreciated is having the museum so close and accessible.
Masters of the Fiddle: Natalie MacMaster and Donnell Leahy
Friday, November 15, 7:30. Two of the world’s most celebrated fiddlers, MacMaster and Leahy meld their virtuosities into a whirlwind of fiddle-driven music, dance, and song, combining the best of French, Celtic, and American bluegrass and even Cajun styles, making it their own. Joined by two highly acclaimed musicians in their own right, pianist Mac Morin and multi-instrumentalist Tim Edey, they’ll treat their audience to the foot-tapping rave-ups, heart-wrenching ballads, and world-class step dancing that have brought audiences to their feet on three continents. $39–$59.

Invitation to the Dance Tuesday, December 31, 1:30. Directed by Gene Kelly. With Kelly. This ambitious dance anthology tells three separate stories. The tales—a circus clown, a bracelet, a magic lantern—are set without words to the music of Jacques Ibert, André Previn, and Nicolai Rimsky-Korsakov. The final episode combines live action and animation. (USA, 1956, 93 min.)
Winter Lights Lantern Festival See lantern displays inside the museum and Environment of Lights artist installations on Wade Oval, beginning Friday evening, December 6 and continuing throughout December. Special lantern activities are part of Holiday CircleFest on Sunday, December 8. See ClevelandArt.org for details.

Lantern Making Workshops November 8-24, Fridays 6:00-8:30 and Sundays 2:00-4:30. Community Arts director Robin Van Lear and her staff lead lantern workshops inspired by Asian lantern traditions and contemporary innovations. Choose from a variety of styles made from paper and split reed or red twig dogwood. Attend as many sessions as needed. Most styles take multiple sessions to complete. Individuals $50; families $150 up to four people, $25 each additional person. One lantern per person; $25 each additional lantern. Children under 15 must register and attend with someone older. To register or for more information, call 216-707-2483 or email commartsinfo@cleveandart.org.

Volunteers We need your help during Holiday CircleFest. Call Liz Pim in the volunteer office at 216-707-2593.

Holiday CircleFest Sunday, December 8, 1:00-5:30, lantern procession at 5:30. The museum joins two dozen neighboring institutions for Holiday CircleFest, University Circle’s annual open house. Lantern displays, workshops, and much more, culminate in procession into and around Wade Oval. Follow us back to the atrium after the procession for cookies and cocoa from 6:00 to 6:30. See ClevelandArt.org for updated listings. For questions, call 216-707-2483 or email commartsinfo@cleveandart.org.

MIX

MIX: Underneath Friday, November 1, 5:00-9:00. Go beneath the surface. Don a mask or come in costume, and uncover monsters, spirits, and fragments of the invisible.

MIX: Miniatures Friday, December 6, 5:00-9:00. MIX goes pocket sized. Look closely to discover the grandeur of the miniature, and explore juxtapositions between portrait miniatures and their contemporary relatives.

MIX: Celebrate Friday, January 3, 5:00-11:00. We’re closing in on the completion of the museum’s monumental expansion and renovation project. Celebrate this historic moment with the first MIX of 2014, featuring the return of Solstice favorite DJ Rekha, spinning her signature hip-hop-infused blend of contemporary electronic dance with Bhangra and Bolly wood sounds.
Guided Tours Daily, 1:30. Join our CMA-trained volunteer docents as they lead visitors through our permanent collections and free exhibitions. Tours and topics vary by presenter. Tours depart from the information desk in the atrium. Free.

Exhibition Tours Daily through December 22, 2:30. Explore the special exhibition Sicily: Art and Invention Between Greece and Rome with our docents. All tours depart from the information desk in the atrium and proceed to the special exhibition on the lower level of the east wing. Exhibition ticket required.

Art in the Afternoon Second Tuesdays, 12:5. Monthly docent-led conversations in the galleries for audiences with memory loss designed to lift the spirits, engage the mind, and provide a social experience. Free, but pre-registration required; call 216-231-1482.

How Advertising Sold Race Wednesday, October 30, 7:00, photography galleries. With all identifying text and logos removed, the advertising images in Hank Willis Thomas’s series Unbranded become an exploration of the changing (or unchanging) generalizations surrounding race, culture, and identity. Barbara Tannenbaum, curator of photography, delves into the issues raised by Thomas’s altered advertisements with former advertising executive, photography collector, and Transformer Station co-founder Fred Bidwell.

Art Bites Need a break in the middle of your day? Get some food for thought with Art Bites, lunchtime talks with a twist—unique explorations of the galleries inspired by your favorite books, television shows, and more. Meet in the atrium.

Wibbly-Wobbly Timey-Wimey Thursday, November 21, 12:30. Celebrate 50 years of Doctor Who by time-traveling through the collections to depictions of places visited by the Doctor and his companions.

The Polar Express Thursday, December 19, 12:30. Get in the holiday spirit with a tour of the collections inspired by the classic children’s book by Chris Van Allsburg.

The Cleveland Apollo Wednesday, November 20, 7:00, focus gallery. Michael Bennett, curator of Greek and Roman art, conducts a tour of the focus exhibition Praxiteles: The Cleveland Apollo, which includes Roman marble copies of the sculpture in addition to the bronze original owned by the Cleveland Museum of Art. Bennett explores topics discussed in his new book, published in association with the exhibition.

Fragments of the Invisible Wednesday, December 18, 7:00, Smith Exhibition Gallery. Join Constantine Petridis, curator of African art, as he discusses the fragmentary nature of a handful of Congolese artworks that the museum acquired from Belgian collectors René and Odette Delenne in 2010. Meet in the exhibition.
Select lectures are ticketed. Call the ticket center at 216-421-7350 or visit ClevelandArt.org.

Robert M. Edsel Wednesday, November 6, 6:30, Gartner Auditorium. How did so much of the art and architecture of Europe escape destruction during World War II? Robert M. Edsel, author of The Monuments Men: Allied Heroes, Nazi Thieves and the Greatest Treasure Hunt in History, Rescuing Da Vinci, and most recently Saving Italy: The Race to Rescue a Nation's Treasures from the Nazis, answers this very question. A cinematic adaptation of The Monuments Men starring George Clooney is released in December. Book signing to follow. The talk is part two of the series Stolen Art, Heroic Recoveries, focusing on heroes who stepped up to save the world’s treasures amidst times of crime and war. The speakers offer fascinating true stories of stolen art safely recovered and priceless masterpieces valiantly protected. $30, CMA members $25. Register through the ticket center. A limited number of student tickets available for $5, in person at the ticket center only; must show current student ID.
Sponsored by the Painting and Drawing Society.

ARTIST LECTURE CANCELED
Contemporary Artist Lecture Series
We regret to announce that, due to temporary health problems, artist Roman Signer will not lecture on Saturday, November 9. Look for a rescheduled date in 2014.

If You Remember, I’ll Remember: A Conversation With Dario Robleto
Friday, November 22, 7:00, recital hall. Explore how art keeps memory alive with artist Dario Robleto and curator Cory Korkow as they discuss Robleto’s work in the context of Korkow’s exhibition Disembodied Portrait Miniatures and Their Contemporary Relatives, and the timeless desire to capture the spirit of loved ones. Join in the conversation: pose your questions to Robleto, discuss your reactions to the exhibition, and share your own ideas about art and memory in this interactive and thought-provoking program. $15, CMA members $10. Students free with ID in person only.

AFRICAN ART TALK IN JANUARY
Five Centuries of Art and History in the Congo Saturday, January 18, 2:00. Cécile Fromont received her Ph.D. in history of art and architecture from Harvard University in 2008. Prior to joining the University of Chicago faculty, she was at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Her 2011 article “Dance, Image, Myth, and Conversion in the Kingdom of Kongo” in African Arts was selected as one of 50 influential journal articles published by the MIT Press between 1962 and 2012. Drawing from the Cleveland Museum of Art’s outstanding collection and other treasures of expressive culture from West Central Africa, Fromont’s lecture explores 500 years of the region’s history through art.

ART STORIES
Thursdays, 10:30–11:00. Join us in Studio Play for this weekly storytelling program that combines children’s books, works from the collection, and hands-on activities. Designed for children ages 2 to 5 and their favorite grown-up. Free; preregistration encouraged as space is limited. Register through the ticket center.

ART TOGETHER

Families make, share, and have fun together! Each workshop is a unique hands-on experience that links art-making to one of our special exhibitions. Artworks inspire exploration of a wide variety of art techniques and materials. Whether you attend one workshop or participate in the whole series, we encourage you and your family to make Art Together. Register through the ticket center.

Mask-Making Sunday, November 17, 1:00–3:30. Inspired by Fragments of the Invisible: The Delvene Collection of Congo Sculpture, images in this exhibition will be the starting point for our own creations. We’ll transform traditional and recycled materials into unique masks. Adult/child pair $36, CMA members $30; each additional person $5.

Wrap It Up! Wednesday, December 11, 4:00–5:30. Create decorative papers, cards, and tags for all occasions using a variety of techniques—from stamping and stenciling to embroidery. We’ll visit the galleries in search of colorful patterns to inspire us. Best for age 7 and up. Adult/child pair $24, CMA members $20; each additional person $5. Members register after November 1; non-members after November 15.

LiterArti Go beyond the printed page with our new discussion group for devoted readers and art lovers. Share your thoughts on our selected read (books, short stories, and graphic novels related to art of all styles, types, and periods) at locations around Cleveland, then come to the museum and explore real-life art straight out of the story. We kick off this twice-yearly series with Kurt Vonnegut’s Bluebeard, the fictional autobiography of Abstract Expressionist painter Rabo Karabekian, whose unfortunate choice of medium has left him only a humorous footnote in the annals of art history. $20, CMA members $15. Bring your own copy of the book (available in the museum store). Fee includes a drink for our discussion. Register through the ticket center.

Happy Dog Wednesday, November 13, 7:00–8:00, Happy Dog, 5801 Detroit Avenue. Dig into the book with a spirited discussion.

Museum Galleries Saturday, November 16, 2:00–3:00. Put Rabo in context with a detailed look at Abstract Expressionist works in the museum galleries.

Art and Fiction Book Club Returns on January 15 for three successive Wednesdays. The selection for January is The Temple of the Golden Pavilion by Yukio Mishima, the story of Mizoguchi, a stutterer who feels utterly alone until becoming an acolyte at a famous, extraordinarily beautiful temple in Kyoto. $50, CMA members $40. Register through the ticket center.

Make & Take: Craft with Style Every second Wednesday of the month, join others in the atrium to participate in simple craft projects. Cash bar available. $5, CMA members $3.

Embroidering Cards Wednesday, November 13, 5:30–8:00. Create figural or abstract designs to embroider onto blank cards.

Making Paper Garland Wednesday, December 11, 5:30–8:00. Explore a handful of techniques to make festive and inexpensive garlands.

Gallery One Host Program Gallery One offers visitors new ways of interpreting the museum’s collection through a unique blend of art, interpretation, and technology. Hosts welcome and help visitors navigate the space and its interactive features, and talk with visitors of all ages about art. The training course takes place on three Wednesday evenings, November 6, 13, and 20, 6:00–8:30. Hosts are expected to volunteer in Gallery One for at least two shifts each month. All applicants are required to complete an in-person interview. To apply, contact Liz Pim at lpim@clevelandart.org.

ART CLASSES FOR CHILDREN AND TEENS

6 Saturdays, January 18–February 22, 10:00–11:30 or 1:00–2:30. Your child can learn about the treasures of the Cleveland Museum of Art while developing his or her own creativity. We learn by looking at art and making it in the studios.

Art for Parent and Child (age 3) Mornings ONLY. Four hands are better than two! Parents and children learn together while creating all kinds of art inspired by gallery visits. Limit 12 pairs.

Mini-Masters: Shapes (ages 4–5) Discover geometric and organic shapes in our galleries. Back in the classroom, we’ll make shapes from paper, fabric, paint, and many other things.

Buzz, Flutter, Slither, and Claw (ages 5–6) Find bugs, birds, snakes, and animals in our galleries and then create these creatures out of all kinds of art materials.

Art Experiments (ages 6–8) Artists learn by experimenting with lots of different materials. We’ll look at examples in our collection and then practice with metal foil, paint, papier-mâché, and found materials.

Time Travelers (ages 8–10) Travel the world through our galleries and visit Egypt, Japan, South America, and the Middle Ages in Europe. After our travels we’ll make our own art from fabric, paint, clay, and other materials.

Draw, Paint, Print! (ages 10–12) Learn new skills and perfect the ones you already know. Experiment with color mixing and different kinds of paint. Learn simple printmaking techniques. Anyone can succeed in this class with a sampling of media.

Intro to Painting for Teens (ages 13–17) We will focus on different styles and techniques using watercolor and acrylic. The class learns from observation in the galleries as well as exercises in the classroom.

Claymation: Bring Art to Life! (ages 11 and up) Learn how to make characters from armatures and polymer clay. Use paintings from our CMA collection as the backdrop and breathe new life and narratives into them. We will use our editing equipment to produce stop-action animation shorts. Instructor: Dave Shaw. Limit 10. $120. CMA members $100.

Fees and Registration Most classes $84. CMA family members $72. Art for Parent and Child $96/$84. Claymation $120/$100. Members registration begins December 1, general registration on December 15. Register through the ticket center.

Gestural Drawing in the Atrium and Galleries 3 Sundays, February 15–March 1, 12:30–3:00. Instructor: Susan Gray Bé. $95, CMA members $85. Includes model fee for one session. All supplies provided. Experience the brilliant light of the Ames Family Atrium while drawing live models! Other afternoons will be spent in the galleries. Practice, expression, and technique will be equally encouraged. Quick poses in charcoal and conté will be followed by longer drawings in various dry media: charcoal, graphite pencil, and colored conté pencils.
FOR TEACHERS

Art to Go See and touch amazing works of art up to 4,000 years old as the museum comes to you with objects from the Education Art collection. Hands-on interactive presentations encourage observation, creative thinking, decision making, problem solving, and teamwork. The 40- to 60-minute presentations are scheduled Monday through Thursday, 9:30–2:30 or Wednesday evenings; preschool presentations on Fridays. Full information at ClevelandArt.org, or contact Karen Levinsky at 216-707-2467.

All-Day Workshop: Slip-Glazed Ceramics November 3, 10:00–4:00 (lunch on your own). Instructor: George Woideck. Using CMA artworks as inspiration, learn a variety of techniques involving the application of slip. Investigate curriculum connections and ways to explore these techniques with your students. $100, CMA members and TRC Advantage $80; includes parking and supplies. Graduate credit from Ashland University may be available for an additional fee. Register through the ticket center.

Educator’s Night Out: Artworks as Primary Sources December 4, 6:00–7:30. Artworks often give clues about life in a specific time or place. Enjoy a relaxing evening led by a fellow classroom educator as you explore practical applications for using artworks as primary sources. A cash bar will be available and your first drink is on us! $5, free for TRC Advantage members; includes teaching materials. Register through the ticket center.

TRC to Go Let us come to you! We’ll customize a professional development session for your district, school, or subject area. From artworks to teaching kits, on-site offerings and off-site programs, explore ways that CMA can support curriculum across all subject areas and grade levels.

Teacher Resource Center Advantage Join TRC Advantage to check out thematic teaching kits, receive customized discounts on workshops, create a personalized curriculum plan for your classroom, and more! Individual and school benefit levels are available.

TEXTILE ART ALLIANCE

Lecture: History and Creation of Buratto and Filet Lace by Diane Daiker Friday, November 1, 7:00. Diane Daiker’s lecture will focus on the history and technique of 16th-century buratto and filet needle lace, examples of which can be seen in CMA’s Renaissance gallery 117. Daiker’s longtime membership in the Society for Creative Anachronism (SCA) has given her the opportunity to study, practice, and teach medieval and Renaissance lacemaking. Historical reenactments with SCA are in contrast to her day job at a Fortune 500 company. Come share in this exquisite work. Free to TAA members and full-time students, $5 at the door for non-members.

Workshop: Creating Buratto and Filet Lace Patterns with Diane Daiker Saturday, November 2, 10:00–4:00, CMA Green Room. Discover how lacemakers of the Renaissance created their beautiful lace. You will learn the basic stitches of buratto and filet patterns, inspired by examples in CMA’s collection. Two different techniques are employed: one using a woven, twisted net; the other, a hand-knotted netting. See how these techniques can also be applied to modern textiles. Small fee for supplies. $100, TAA members $75. For reservations, contact Katherine Dunlevy at dunlevy@windstream.net or 440-543-8138.

Gelatin Monoprinting with Katherine Dunlevy Thursday, January 9, 10:00–4:00, CMA classroom. Experiment with textural monoprinting using a gelatin slab as a printing “plate” and water-soluble printing inks on fabrics and paper. This method requires very little pressure, so a printing press is not required. Participants can prepare their own gelatin plate (directions available) or purchase a pre-made, reusable 8 x 10-inch plate for $30. Supply fee of $10 includes fabrics, inks, and other items. $35, TAA members $20. For reservations, contact Katherine Dunlevy at dunlevy@windstream.net or 440-543-8138.

HOLIDAY TALES FROM THE ARCHIVES

The museum has always been particularly festive during the holiday season. As early as the 1920s children were invited to participate in holiday parties with all the trimmings. By far the most beloved museum holiday tradition was the annual community Christmas carol Candlelight program, begun in 1941. The program consisted of two choirs processing into the armory and garden courts for a grand performance and Christmas carol sing-along. The concert concluded with the audience processing out the south entrance while singing Silent Night. The annual holiday concert continued until the retirement of Karel Paukert, curator of musical arts.

The most recent museum holiday tradition is the Winter Lights Lantern Festival, which coincides with the University Circle Holiday CircleFest. Since 1994 lantern-making and decorating workshops culminate in the lantern procession featuring guest artists, giant puppets, dancers, and museum visitors. See page 38 for details about this year’s edition.

Through the years local artists, many recognizable from the May Show, expressed holiday wishes to museum directors and staff with greeting cards of their own design. An exhibition of these greeting cards is on display in the Ingalls Library. They are arranged in the small display case in the library reference room. Notice, too, the wrapping paper that lines the bottom; it was designed for the museum store some years ago using our copy of Clement Moore’s The Night before Christmas, “Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse.”
